Yale-NUS College endowment fund gets $20,000 from school

YALE-NUS College, Singapore’s first liberal arts college, received almost $20,000 from Yusof Ishak Secondary School for its endowment fund on Friday. The fund provides students in need with financial assistance.

This is the first gift from another educational institution that the college has received, ahead of its official opening next year. Other contributions have come in from local foundations, families and trusts, as well as multi-national corporations.

The money was raised through the school’s annual festival of the arts last year.

School principal Richard Chew said: “We also hope to educate our students on the value of giving back to the educational fraternity that gives them every opportunity to progress.”