Help is here for the wrongfully convicted

THE National University of Singapore (NUS) Criminal Justice Club has launched a new initiative on Friday to help those who believe they were wrongfully convicted.

Called the Innocence Project, this student-led project is a collaborative effort between the NUS Criminal Justice Club, the Law Society of Singapore and the Association of Criminal Lawyers of Singapore.

The Project will identify these individuals who have run out of all avenues of appeal and refer them to lawyers to take up their cases pro bono.

They must either apply, or be referred to the initiative by the Law Society of Singapore.
